Around the World in Eighty Days.

[Jule Verne] (1828 ~ 1905)

- [Chapter 33 In which Phileas Fogg shows himself equal to the occasion.] -

What had happened was very simple. Phileas Fogg wished to go to Liverpool, but the captain would not carry him there. The Phileas Fogg had taken passage for Bordeaux, and during the thirty hours he had been on board, had so shrewdly managed with his winks that the sailors and stokers, who were only an occasional crew, and were not on the best terms with the captain, went over to him in a body. This was why Phileas Fogg was in command instead of Captain Speedy; why the captain was a prisoner in his cabin; and why, in short, the Herietta was directing her course towards Liverpool. It was very clear to see Mr. Fogg manage the craft, that he had been a sailor.
